RISK OF SEVERE WEATHER FORECASTED FOR THE REGION

June 5, 2023

Dear RV Guests,

The National Weather Service is once again forecasting a chance of severe weather development for the Rio Grande Valley starting this afternoon into early this evening. In the event that severe thunderstorm activity develops expect the potential for damaging winds capable of exceeding 60 mph, hail, brief heavy down pours and flooding. Also included is a very low risk for tornado development, so please stay tuned to your local weather station for up to the minute updates and advisories.

We strongly urge campers to take precautionary measures well ahead of the storm by securing loose items around campsites that could easily be tossed and cause damage to neighboring property, and to re-check tie downs making sure camping units are properly secured. Please stay safe by avoiding travel during severe weather and have a plan to seek safe shelter if necessary.

Sincerely,

Joe E. Vega
Parks Director
